

Secretariat Continues Growth Expands Presence in U.S. and Opens Office in Singapore

United States - Secretariat recently moved to a larger office in New York City as part of its strategy to better serve clients in the region and continue its growth in the U.S.

According to Don Harvey, managing director, "The northeast U.S. represents a large opportunity for Secretariat's construction consulting services. Secretariat's focus on construction expertise and quality versus the higher leveraged consulting models has played well into the current market dynamics."

As part of this strategy, Secretariat is pleased to also announce the addition of Sean Donohue, a former Senior Director with FTI Consulting, to the firm's New York office. Mr. Donohue will focus on the northeast marketplace while also assisting with Secretariat's broader efforts in the U.S.

Singapore - Secretariat also opened a new office in Singapore earlier this year to address increasing demand for qualified construction experts in the region.

According to Amit Garg, Secretariat's managing director of Asian operations, "As countries in south and southeast Asia witness increased construction spending on infrastructure, industries, and in the energy sector, there is a greater potential for disputes arising out of these projects to head towards Singapore, which has established itself as a key regional centre for arbitration proceedings. As a result of this increased dispute related work, there is a growing need for experts in delay and damages analysis."
